Overview

Magda C. Rodriguez is an experienced healthcare attorney. Representing a diverse range of healthcare entities, Magda's roster of clients includes healthcare entities, health systems, hospitals, ambulatory surgical centers, and physician practices. She assists health care clients in all aspects operational and regulatory guidance and regularly counsels on litigation avoidance. Magda also provides representation in civil litigation and government investigations.

Drawing on her extensive background, she advises healthcare entities on navigating the ever-changing healthcare industry, including the intricacies of data privacy requirements, investigations of data breaches, and compliance with state and federal reporting obligations. Magda's experience also extends to the successful defense of several class-action lawsuits related to insurance payments and coordination of benefits under insurance policies. Magda regularly provides invaluable support to hospitals, aiding them in operational matters like physician peer reviews, revising medical staff bylaws and policies, and ensuring compliance with National Practitioner Data Bank (NPDB) reporting requirements.

Magda established her foundation in the healthcare industry prior to attending law school when she worked in medical payment posting and reconciliation, at a physician office. In this role, Magda actively resolved insurance disputes and claims denials, while also ensuring compliance with the evolving landscape of HIPAA regulations. Magda regularly leverages this experience to offer insights and strategies to address complex matters.
